Question	Answer
What is the one structural barrier in your context that stops more cooperation from happening between programmes? Is it regulatory, political, or relational?	In my view, the main barriers are the lack of dialogue between different languages. The differing legal and administrative frameworks. And perhaps also political sensitivities.
What is the one thing you hope to take home from this event that would make a real difference in your work?	I hope to take home a strong sense of how cooperation can create real and meaningful impact. I'm looking for practical examples and inspiring success stories that I can adapt to my own work.
What is the one thing you hope to take home from this event that would make a real difference in your work?	What is the ambition level of the EC for interregional cooperation and how do they promote/facilitate this in the regulations? And how is that related to regional innovation?
What is the one thing you hope to take home from this event that would make a real difference in your work?	Pool of different ideas. Inspiration for continuation of believing in cooperation.
What is the one thing you hope to take home from this event that would make a real difference in your work?	What in practice are cooperation actions in specific objectives such as 2.4 promoting climate change adaptation, 2.5 secure access to water, 2.7 biodiversity, 2.8 urban [ability], 4.5 access to health care, or Political Objective 5, which is dedicated to Integrated Territorial Instruments? (which seems to have typically local character)
What is the one thing you hope to take home from this event that would make a real difference in your work?	To obtain arguments to convince stakeholders that collaboration leads to better results.
In one sentence, how would you describe the role you play in making cooperation actions happen, or fail to happen?	The ERDF Regional Programme of [Marche Region, Italy] does not include cooperation actions. However, I see my role as actively contributing to building the foundations for future cooperation. My role is proactive: gathering knowledge, creating connections and raising awareness within my institution. I believe that a lack of engagement or openness to learning could contribute to the failure of cooperation actions, while curiosity, networking, and initiative can enhance their success.
In one sentence, how would you describe the role you play in making cooperation actions happen, or fail to happen?	In my position I help wherever I am needed. So far I have made the experience that it is very important to clearly voice objectives and abilities.
In one sentence, how would you describe the role you play in making cooperation actions happen, or fail to happen?	To gently push and persuade others how cooperation is important and impactful.
In one sentence, how would you describe the role you play in making cooperation actions happen, or fail to happen?	I have been involved with this programme for a while now. I believe that events like this will help me to be more active and investigate the cooperation between regions and together share promising solutions.
